Adjuvant Capital selects Mainstream for fund administration services

Life sciences investment firm Adjuvant Capital has appointed Mainstream Fund Services, Inc as its administrator.

Under the arrangement, Mainstream will provide fund and investor services to Adjuvant Global Health Technology Fund, LP.

Adjuvant Capital was formed to scale up the double-bottom-line investment model pioneered by the Global Health Investment Fund, which was created by The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation and JPMorgan Chase & Co. to support the development of new drugs, vaccines, diagnostics, medical devices, and other enabling technologies for public health challenges that disproportionately burden low- and middle-income countries.

Commenting on the appointment, Mainstream's CEO of Private Equity, Venture Capital and Real Estate, Jay Maher said "As the only active life sciences fund dedicated to new technologies for historically overlooked diseases, Adjuvant Capital could play a critical role in reshaping public health on a global scale. We are excited to be working with a high caliber fund supported by a diverse group of sophisticated alternative asset investors and public health experts, with the potential to generate significant social impact."
